The skin aging process

The characteristics of our skin change over the course of our lifetime, but modern cosmetology offers tools to meet all our specific needs and to enhance the natural beauty of the face, even with the passing of time.

From the age of 35 onwards, the skin undergoes progressive changes to both its structure and its function: it thins and renews itself more slowly, it is unable to retain water and it contains reduced sebum and collagen. The result is dry skin that is less elastic and with deeper wrinkles.

Changes to our skin determined by aging occur gradually, layering damage over each other. In order to slow down the process or counteract its early effects, it is therefore crucial to act in a targeted manner, using specific products and active ingredients that suit the age and needs of the skin.
